

Annalisa Mangiaracina is Associate Professor of Criminal Procedure in the University of Palermo (since 2018) and she has obtained the National Scientific qualification to function as Full Professor (since November 2020). She holds a PhD in Criminal Procedure in 2002. She is also a lawyer. She teaches courses on Criminal Procedure Law (2014- current) and on European, International and Comparative Criminal Procedure in the University of Palermo. She has coordinated for the University of Palermo an European Project (EUROCOORD) on the European Investigation Order; she has taught within the EU Module “Jean Monnet”, within the LL.M. in “International Organizations, International Criminal Law and Crime Prevention”, within the “Specialisation Course in International criminal Law for Young Penalist” and within the Course for Brazilian Judges on organised crimes. She is author of two books and several articles and collective works on different topics regarding national criminal procedure law as well as European and International criminal procedure law, written also in English and Spanish.